

Nacvalac Leaves N.Y., Hits U.S. Charges He Is Spy

New York, June 22 (AP)—Miroslav Nacvalac, Czechoslovak diplomat, left New York by air tonight for Paris and Prague, protesting that the United States branded him a spy and forced him to leave because he would not betray his country.

The United States Government accused Nacvalac of being a communist Czech agent who worked in this country. It revoked his status as a member of the Czech United Nations mission, making him an alien in the country illegally.

Nacvalac, counselor and third-ranking member of the Czech United Nations delegation, called the charges "a fairy story and fabrication of Uncle Dulles." He referred to Allen Dulles, head of the Central Intelligence Agency.

"It Was Clear"

"It was clear that this whole thing came from the Central Intelligence Agency," he said, just before boarding an Air France plane at Idlewild Airport at 7:15 P.M.

Accompanying him to the plane were his wife, Dana, and the couple's two sons, Ivan, 10, and Miroslav, 8.

In a statement distributed to newsmen at the airport, Nacvalac said "My forcible expulsion from this country is a direct consequence of my refusal to become a traitor."

He said on June 13, United States espionage agents approached him while he was having lunch with an American acquaintance and tried to get him to agree to actions that would turn him into a traitor.

"We Are Stronger"

"These people miscalculated moral power, character and devotion of our citizens to their country," he said. "They thought that they could buy betrayal for money or by threats. We know higher moral values than they and that is why we are stronger."

The Czech diplomat also criticized the United Nations Secretary General, Dag Hammarskjöld, because he "did not take any measures against this arbitrariness of the United States Government."

But he said he was leaving "without any hard feelings against the American people."
